Monthly Economic Indicators

• Denver was the 5th-fastest-growing large city in America, according to Wallethub. The report compared 515 cities based on 17 key measures of both growth and decline over the past seven years, including factors such as population growth, growth in share of college-educated population, job growth, median household income growth, and poverty and unemployment rate decreases, among other factors.

• Denver ranked No. 5 for net in-migration among individuals age 25-34 in 2018, according to Avalanche Consulting. Denver had a net in-migration of 56.5 per 10,000 residents, while the most expensive metro areas including San Francisco, Los Angeles, and New York had negative net in-migration. The study cited affordability as a main factor, showing that more expensive metro areas are not attracting young professionals.

• Colorado ranked No. 23 out of all 50 states for the worst road infrastructure, with 1 being the state with the worst roads and 50 having the best roads, according to QuoteWizard by Lending Tree. The study analyzed Federal Highway Administration data to rank states on overall quality of road infrastructure.
